

Media Advisory / Avis aux Médias

An aging demographic and a challenging economic environment are driving the need for transformations in our health care system.

In Canada and around the globe, countries have recognized the inefficiencies of large central health care bureaucracies and have devolved decision making to regional levels to improve the efficiency, and responsiveness and nimbleness of their health care systems.

Since its inception in 2005 the South East Local Health Integration Network (SE LHIN) along with other LHINs have been criticized for being an extra layer of bureaucracy, that takes resources away from the healthcare front line, that are accountable to no one and have accomplished nothing.

On Tuesday, September 18 at CJ's Banquet Hall, 803 Chelsea, Brockville at 11:30 a.m. (registration), South East LHIN CEO Paul Huras will address these criticisms and shed some light on the tough economic realities faced by today's health care system with a presentation to the Brockville Chamber of Commerce.

This presentation has been established as an information session and is open to the general public and chamber members. To register please contact Katherine Heggie at the Brockville Chamber of Commerce, events@brockvillechamber.com or by phone at 613.342.6553.
